with the Oxford University of UK topping the list, followed by Stanford University and Harvard University. In Asia, China's Tsinghua University was adjudged best in the continent with an overall rank of 20.

Phil Baty, chief knowledge officer of THE said, "...Of the debutant Indian institutions to qualify in this year's rankings, Indraprastha Institute of Information Technology in Delhi, King George's Medical University, and Mahatma Gandhi University rank highest (601-800 band). Overall, the Indian Institute of Science (301-350) maintains its position as the highest ranked Indian university in the rankings since it first qualified for the rankings in 2015."

63 Indian universities qualify for 2021's Times Higher Education World University Rankings

The Indian Institute of Science Bangalore has ranked first among the Indian institutes (301-350 band overall), followed by IIT Ropar (351-400) and IIT Indore (401-500) in second and third spots respectively. The latter two institutes have slipped in the rankings since last year.

Of the Indian institutions making their debut in this year's rankings, Indraprastha Institute of Information Technology Delhi, King George's Medical University, and Mahatma Gandhi University rank highest (601-800 band).

India's improved overall representation comes despite the fact that in April, seven first-generation IITs including Delhi, Bombay, Kharagpur and Madras took a decision not to participate in the rankings this year, citing lack of transparency. They said they would reconsider next year if Times Higher Education was able to convince them about the parameters and transparency in the ranking process.
